We value food, the land, and the people who produce it. We believe in sustainable food as a right, not a privilege. We believe that food should be produced in a way that works with ecosystems and protects the soil and biodiversity.

We believe in small scale production and trading systems, that are people not markets. We believe in science and technology being utilised for good not just profit. We believe in diverse communities learning from and working with each other.

We believe in a society where everyone feels included and valued. We believe in communities and people feeling empowered to challenge the root causes of problems and create their own solutions. We believe in communities working in co-operation to develop better ways to self-govern and manage the economy.
