About the event

This event highlights the growing recognition of the importance of parks and greenspaces to the health and wellbeing of UK residents.

No greater evidence can be provided than the nation's current reliance on these space during the pandemic we are all currently experiencing.

For millions of people worldwide, the only option for leisure and exercise has been parks and greenspaces and, in recognition of this, we need to ensure that these vital assets are well-funded and sustainable.

The importance of our greenspaces needs to be written into both our national and local authority strategies and policies and, most importantly, is given the priority it needs to ensure both current and future generations have free access to these life enhancing assets.

This webinar will provide, not only evidence to back up the aforementioned claims, but will also show, in practical terms, how national organisations and local authorities are delivering on this agenda.
